

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

In a display device, when an application operating section is to communicate, each communication state detecting section detects a communication state of each radio communication section. A physical layer selecting section then determines if each physical layer is capable of providing an effective throughput required by each application operating section by each radio communications section. Furthermore, the physical layer selecting section selects from the physical layers a physical layer available for communications of each application operating section.